

Contents

Draft2Digital Book Format Options	2
All-Purpose Section	2
Simple: Drop Cap or Phrase Cap are not available.	2
Modern Watercolour: Drop Cap	3
Modern Watercolour: Phrase Cap	4
Corner Decoration Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available.....	5
Deco Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available	6
Maraschino Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available.....	7
Minimal Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available	8
Mystery and Thriller Section	9
A Clue Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available.....	9
Classy Mystery Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available	10
Nevermore Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available.....	11
Grime Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available	12
Romance Section.....	13
Midnight Oil Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available	13
Subtle Hearts Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available	14
Sweet Bow Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available	15
Science Fiction and Fantasy Section	16
Digital Echo Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available	16
Fantasy Style: Phrase Cap and Drop Cap Both Available.....	17
Hard Line Style: Drop Cap and Phrase Cap Available.....	18
Heraldic Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Available	19
Regal Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Available	20
Dragon Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available	21
Non-Fiction Section	22
D2D Block Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Not Available	22
D2D Textbook Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Available	23

Draft2Digital Book Format Options

All-Purpose Section

Simple: Drop Cap or Phrase Cap are not available.

This is your ebook with D2D Simple Style

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. 'David. Come out. You're safe, we won't hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.' Her voice softened with compassion. 'It's okay. Really.'

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn't just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

'Please, relax. They won't harm you. You're perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.'

'I'd rather just go and lie down.'

She gestured towards the end of the hall. 'You can rest in there. If everything goes to plan, when you wake up tomorrow morning we'll take you home to your family.'

He staggered down the hall to the master bedroom. It was two and half metres from one side to the other, with

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. 'David. Come out. You're safe, we won't hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.' Her voice softened with compassion. 'It's okay. Really.'

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn't just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

'Please, relax. They won't harm you. You're perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.'

'I'd rather just go and lie down.'

Chapter Two

FIVE MINUTES LATER the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

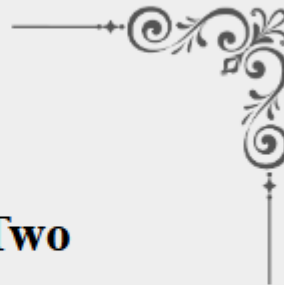

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘PLEASE, RELAX. THEY won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’
‘I’d rather just go and lie down.’

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. 'David. Come out. You're safe, we won't hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.' Her voice softened with compassion. 'It's okay. Really.'

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn't just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

'Please, relax. They won't harm you. You're perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.'

'I'd rather just go and lie down.'

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

‘I’d rather just go and lie down.’

She gestured towards the end of the hall. ‘You can rest in there. If everything goes to plan, when you wake

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

‘I’d rather just go and lie down.’

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

• • • •

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

‘I’d rather just go and lie down.’

She gestured towards the end of the hall. ‘You can rest in there. If everything goes to plan, when you wake up tomorrow morning we’ll take you home to your family.’

He staggered down the hall to the master bedroom. It was two and half metres from one side to the other, with

Mystery and Thriller Section

A Clue Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available

This is your ebook with A Clue Style

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. 'David. Come out. You're safe, we won't hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.' Her voice softened with compassion. 'It's okay. Really.'

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn't just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

'Please, relax. They won't harm you. You're perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.'

'I'd rather just go and lie down.'

She gestured towards the end of the hall. 'You can rest in there. If everything goes to plan, when you wake

Classy Mystery Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. 'David. Come out. You're safe, we won't hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.' Her voice softened with compassion. 'It's okay. Really.'

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn't just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. 'David. Come out. You're safe, we won't hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.' Her voice softened with compassion. 'It's okay. Really.'

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn't just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

'Please, relax. They won't harm you. You're perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.'

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. 'David. Come out. You're safe, we won't hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.' Her voice softened with compassion. 'It's okay. Really.'

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn't just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

'Please, relax. They won't harm you. You're perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.'

'I'd rather just go and lie down.'

Romance Section

Midnight Oil Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available

This is your ebook with Midnight Oil Style

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

‘I’d rather just go and lie down.’

She gestured towards the end of the hall. ‘You can rest in there. If everything goes to plan, when you wake

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

‘I’d rather just go and lie down.’

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. 'David. Come out. You're safe, we won't hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.' Her voice softened with compassion. 'It's okay. Really.'

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn't just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

.. ~ ~ ..

'Please, relax. They won't harm you. You're perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.'

'I'd rather just go and lie down.'

She gestured towards the end of the hall. 'You can rest in there. If everything goes to plan, when you wake

Science Fiction and Fantasy Section

Digital Echo Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Both Available

This is your ebook with Digital Echo Style

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

This is your ebook with Hard Line Style

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

‘I’d rather just go and lie down.’

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

‘I’d rather just go and lie down.’

She gestured towards the end of the hall. ‘You can rest in there. If everything goes to plan, when you wake

This is your ebook with Regal Style

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

‘I’d rather just go and lie down.’

She gestured towards the end of the hall. ‘You can rest in there. If everything goes to plan, when you wake up tomorrow morning we’ll take you home to your family.’

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. 'David. Come out. You're safe, we won't hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.' Her voice softened with compassion. 'It's okay. Really.'

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn't just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

Non-Fiction Section

D2D Block Style: Drop and Phrase Cap Not Available

This is your ebook with D2D Block Style

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. 'David. Come out. You're safe, we won't hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.' Her voice softened with compassion. 'It's okay. Really.'

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn't just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

'Please, relax. They won't harm you. You're perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.'

'I'd rather just go and lie down.'

She gestured towards the end of the hall. 'You can rest in there. If everything goes to plan, when you wake up tomorrow morning we'll take you home to your family.'

Chapter Two

Five minutes later the young woman tapped on the bathroom door. ‘David. Come out. You’re safe, we won’t hurt you. Come and lie down and relax.’ Her voice softened with compassion. ‘It’s okay. Really.’

David blew his nose on the toilet paper, mopped his face again, then unsteadily rose and leaned over the bathroom sink. He splashed his face with water again and looked at himself in the mirror – charming. Now he didn’t just look pale and terrified, his eyes were swollen and red from tears of cowardice. Lovely.

Time to stop being such a wuss and to reach into his Scottish Celtic ancestry to find some bravery. Sprit of William Wallace and all that. He smiled wryly at himself in the mirror, splashed more cold water on his eyes, and opened the bathroom door. The young woman smiled at him.

‘Please, relax. They won’t harm you. You’re perfectly safe. Come out and watch television with me.’

‘I’d rather just go and lie down.’